Story Factors:

Traditional: Klatootinian civilization was notable for its strong belief in tradition and the wisdom of elders. The center of their culture was the Fountain of Ancients, a slowly evolving natural glass sculpture on Klatootine's Derelkoos Desert. Long before the formation of the Galactic Republic, primitive Klatootinians discovered the Fountain, and revered it as a symbol of patience, tenacity, and the idea of strength coming from age. Their society was ruled by a Council of Elders, who granted young Klatootinians few rights. Klatootinians were taught the myths and traditions of their people from a young age, in a process which tended to suppress individuality. At the age of ten, they would be sold into servitude, with the most rebellious youths sent into the harshest conditions.

Description: Tor Braxis was a Klatootinian podracer who was active during the Imperial Era. During or after 19 BBY, he participated in the podrace Star Gauntlet on the planet Janix. He was sponsored by crime lord Nico Deemis to race under his banner, then was paid off by Looti Vario to lose the race, and then was paid by a mystery third party to steal the casino's credits after sending the race into chaos. The mystery third party will be revealed to be the former Sith Lord Maul who will follow Braxis and will behead with his lightsaber. After killing the Klatootinian, Maul took the credit bricks, being carried on Braxis' podracer, which was connected to Maul's speeder.
