Description: Orvek was a human who became a disciple of the fallen Jedi Padawan Ferren Barr after their home was demolished by the Galactic Empire following its founding in 19 BBY. By 18 BBY, Orvek worked with Barr on the planet Mon Cala until Imperial forces that included the Sith Lord Darth Vader and the Jedi-hunting Inquisitorius discovered them that year. Though Orvek wished to defend the people of Mon Cala, Orvek, Barr, and the other disciples evacuated their refuge on the planet and traversed through the ocean. However, they were soon found by Vader, who was in an Imperial submarine. After Nipaltoo, another of Barr's disciples, failed to stop the submarine, Orvek sacrificed their life to slow the Sith Lord down and allow the others to reach Bel City.

Biography

Joining Ferren Barr

Shortly after the founding of the Galactic Empire in 19 BBY, Orvek's home was bulldozed for an Imperial relay facility. As Orvek watched the demolition of the only home they had ever known, one of the citizens protested to the clone shock troopers guarding the site. After trying to assure them by saying they would be compensated, the clone troopers refused to provide an answer for where the group should go and pointed their blasters at them, forcing an enraged Orvek and the others to leave. Sometime later, Orvek met Ferren Barr, a former Jedi Padawan who claimed to be a Jedi Master, in a cantina. Barr, who had fallen to the dark side of the Force, told Orvek that they would bring down the Empire together, manipulating them into joining him using a Jedi mind trick and making Orvek one of his six acolytes.

By 18 BBY, Barr took Orvek and the other acolytes to the planet Mon Cala, where Barr came to influence the Mon Calamari King Lee-Char in his negotiations with the Empire. Believing the king was being guided by a Jedi, Emperor Palpatine sent the Sith Lord Darth Vader and members of the Inquisitorius—former Jedi turned Jedi hunters—there. Learning of Vader's approach, Barr revealed to Orvek and his disciples that Vader was once the Jedi Anakin Skywalker, but had turned to the dark side and attacked the Jedi Temple on the planet Coruscant. Displaying elements of Vader's life with a hologram, Barr explained that Skywalker had become Vader and had started hunting any surviving Jedi alongside the Inquisitors. Barr then told his disciples that he had a plan that would allow them to avenge the Jedi and encourage rebellion against the Empire.

Evacuation and death

After King Lee-Char told Barr that Vader had learned Barr's location, Barr ordered the evacuation of his refuge. The disciples donned self-contained dive suits to swim and breathe underwater before Barr explained that he planned for them to try to flee the planet. Orvek protested this action, suggesting that they should do something to help the people of Mon Cala—who were being invaded by the Empire—because Barr had been advising their king. Insisting that they had done all they needed to on Mon Cala but that they needed to also make change elsewhere, Barr sent his disciples off into the ocean via a hole in the bottom of the cave before following after them.

As the disciples used Underwater Turbo Sled Pikes to traverse the water, they were soon found by Vader, who was in his Imperial submarine. One of the other acolytes, Nipaltoo, shot at Vader's submarine to try and end the fight before it began, but Vader just crushed their helmet with the Force. As the remaining acolytes fled for Bel City at Barr's direction, Orvek realized Vader was catching up and turned their pike around. One of the disciples, Verla, noticed this and asked what Orvek was doing, Orvek explaining that they were trying to buy the others time to escape by slowing the Imperials down. Orvek then turned around and attacked Vader's submarine head on, wielding a harpoon gun. As Orvek expressed their excitement to fight the Imperials, they were killed in an explosion. However, Orvek slowed Vader down enough for the others to make it to Bel City.
