Description: The Kyramud-type battleship, named after the Mando'a word for killer or assassin, comprised a series of capital ships used by the Mandalorian Crusaders and Neo-Crusaders.

Characteristics
The Kyramud-type battleship resembled the Basilisk war droids in aesthetic design, and were based on stolen Basiliskan design. Later models, although similar to the type used during the Great Sith War, were sleeker designs, dispensing with the more organic features of the older model. They mounted armored "fins" along the sides.

History
These vessels were often used for ground assaults.

At least one such ship attacked the Tetan carbonite smelter over Empress Teta, launching numerous open-air Basilisk war droids. Different models were used by the Mandalorian Neo-Crusaders in 3964 BBY, during the Mandalorian Wars. These also carried Basilisk war droids as well as fighters.

Mandalorian battleships were often accompanied by smaller warships and support ships when in battle. Before and during the Great Sith War, they were escorted by small insect-like vessels, while during the Mandalorian Wars, they were supported by Jehavey'ir-type assault ships and Lictor-class dungeon ships.

Rohlan Dyre served aboard a battleship named Jai'galaar prior to 3963 BBY leading a squad of shocktroopers.
