Description: A model of third-generation dark trooper combat droid was used by the Imperial remnant of Moff Gideon. The black and silver-plated droids were humanoid in shape and featured a pair of red photoreceptors. A platoon of third-generation dark troopers were held in a cargo bay of Gideon's light cruiser in cold storage. After a skirmish on Nevarro caused the destruction of an Imperial base, a comms officer reported to Moff Gideon, who was overseeing rows of deactivated dark troopers with a group of scientists, that a homing beacon was installed on the Razor Crest. After tracking the Razor Crest to Tython, Gideon had four dark troopers deployed to the planet's surface to kidnap a Force-sensitive alien child known as Grogu from his guardian, the Mandalorian Din Djarin. The droids succeeded and returned to Gideon's light cruiser with the youngling. While rescuing his foundling, Djarin destroyed one of the droids by piercing the droid's unarmored neck with a beskar staff. The remainder were subsequently blown out of the airlock and into space, but returned to the cruiser and almost managed to re-take it single-handedly. Mere seconds before they were able to breach the bridge blast doors, however, the Jedi Master Luke Skywalker arrived and destroyed them all.

Dark troopers were equipped with two rocket boosters, one in each foot. Dark trooper armor was capable of withstanding blaster fire, several seconds of exposure to a flamethrower, and several strikes from whistling birds, but were still vulnerable to lightsaber strikes, allowing the Jedi Luke Skywalker to destroy an entire platoon with his lightsaber with relative ease. Dark troopers also had extreme strength. A single dark trooper was able to pry open the doors to its containment area and could easily pick up Din Djarin and throw him. Two dark troopers were able to work together to severely damage a set of blast doors through repeated strikes, and a single dark trooper was capable of severely damaging a wall of Gideon's light cruiser by repeatedly striking Djarin's beskar helmet, but was unable to cave-in the helmet itself. Dark troopers were also capable of functioning in the vacuum of space.
